Florida State Fire College

Origin of the Florida State Fire College

The first Florida State Fire College Training session was held in Daytona Beach on May 7-9, 1930. In 1949, the Fire College became a State institution with permanent headquarters in Ocala on six acres. In 1969, under the State reorganization plan, the Florida State Fire College was placed under the Department of Community Affairs and became the Bureau of State Fire College.

In 1975, the Florida Legislature took action which resulted in the consolidation of two existing Bureaus into one. It was during this Legislative session that the new Bureau was assigned to the Division of State Fire Marshal and acquired the title of Bureau of Fire Standards and Training.

About the Fire College

As part of the Florida Division of State Fire Marshal, the Bureau of Fire Standards and Training operates the Florida State Fire College (FSFC). As prescribed by Florida Statute, the Bureau is charged with developing training and regulating Florida fire certifications and fire safety programs. FSFC is a multi-discipline training facility with an emphasis on fire training. Programs are offered to Florida's fire and emergency services, as well as to law enforcement and the fire service industry.

Our Present Facility

In 1989, a new 37-acre site was dedicated and opened 7 miles north of Ocala, in Lowell, among the rolling hills of central Florida's horse country. The complex includes a burn building, smoke tower, and a variety of training props that are used for all disciplines of fire suppression, hazardous materials and urban search and rescue training. In addition, there is an administration building, learning resource center, classrooms, apparatus building, 100-bed dormitory, several lounges, and a cafeteria.

What's in Our Future?

We are focused on improving the current campus while planning for future expansion. We have just completed a comprehensive study of the current campus.

Architects have recommended significant updates to the existing campus. Included are structural repairs to building foundations, introduction of covered walkways and outdoor seating areas, as well as landscape improvements. We are also focused on the future expansion of our campus. Fifty acres have been acquired immediately south of the existing campus. Our visioning process is in full gear, discussing future needs with our customers to clearly shape our investment. Our stakeholders consistently communicate their expectations of contemporary lodging facilities, state-of-the-art virtual training tools, and enhanced training props relevant to expanding emergency disciplines they face. Plans for the additional property will accommodate instructional props to ensure all emergency responders continue to have the best training opportunities and readiness capabilities available to them at the FSFC.

Tell Me About the Ocala Area?

Marion County has the same land area as the entire state of Rhode Island. For people who enjoy the outdoors, there are places to go and things to do all year round. The county is famous for its huge oaks, and towering sand pines of the Ocala National Forest. The subtropical climate makes Marion County a vacation spot year-round.

Opportunities for fishing, kayaking, boating, swimming and other water sports abound in a region covered by hundreds of fresh-water springs, lakes and the Silver, Rainbow, Ocklawaha, and Withlacoochee Rivers.

The pure, clean waters of springs and spring-fed lakes and rivers are a destination for snorkeling and diving. Marion County is ideal for fishing in our area lakes such as Orange, Jumper, George, Lake Weir and the Withlacoochee River. They are unequalled for bass fishing which is just one of the more than 100 species of fish to be found in the region's waterways. Just outside of Ocklawaha on Lake Weir is the 560 acre Carney Island Park which offers hiking, biking, swimming, picnicking and canoeing.

How Can I Receive Updates From the Fire College?

Anyone interested in information from the Fire College should be on the "A-List". The A-List is an email distribution group the FSFC uses to distribute new information. This includes information ranging from general announcements, class announcements, public hearing notices, employment opportunities, pertinent news, and other important information.
